

LORIMER'S FRIENDS TO THE RESCUE

Claim He is the Victim of a Gigantic Conspiracy

AN APPROPRIATION BILL

Asking for $15,000 to Further Conduct Investigation May be Killed.

CL 127

Springfield, Ill., April 6.—The battleground of the bribery investigation concerning the $100,000 jack pot in connection with the election of U. S. Senator Lorimer today was transferred from the Illinois senate to the Illinois house.

Friends of Lorimer, asserting that he is the victim of a gigantic conspiracy to ruin him financially and destroy him politically, are laying plans for the defeat of the bill appropriating $15,000 for the use of the state senate bribery investigating committee to continue its work.

The state senate, following the sensational testimony of Clarence S. Funk, general manager of the International Harvester Co., yesterday afternoon passed the bill with a rush. It was immediately sent to the house, and it is expected to be finally acted on before the week ends.

Members of the bribery investigating committee do not believe that the house will dare defeat the bill in view of the evidence thus far gathered by the committee. It is asserted that justice to all concerned makes it imperative that the probe be conducted to its finish and the validity or falseness of the information gathered be established.

If the bill should meet death in the house, plans are already being laid by friends of the bribery probe to start a subscription movement to secure funds to enable the committee to complete its work.

The testimony of Funk, in which he asserted that Edward Hines, the Chicago lumber king, asked him to suggest that the Harvester Co. contribute $10,000 toward the $100,000 jack pot necessary to elect Lorimer was the sole topic of conversation among the state legislators today.

The next meeting of the bribery committee will be held next Thursday, when important disclosures are looked for.

Pittsburg, April 6.—"That is something I will discuss on the floor of the senate and not in the street," said Senator Lorimer here today, regarding the charges made in Springfield yesterday against the $100,000 slush fund. Lorimer did not seem troubled and said he had not troubled to read the Funk charges in detail.

New York, April 6.—To get results from their parade of protest yesterday, the unions today are preparing to petition Gov. Dix and the legislature, asking for drastic reforms with regard to fire protection.

So impressed was the public yesterday with the demonstration that it is conceded that any man who votes against the legislation demanded would commit political suicide.

DEMAND

New York, April 6.—Formal demand was made today upon President Taft and the state department to cease discriminating against American citizens simply because they are Jews. Taft was notified that if he does not take action, the matter will be taken to the federal courts. Attorney Nicholas Klein of Cincinnati is heading the movement.

GOV. HARMON SENDS SPECIAL MESSAGE TO LEGISLATURE

Columbus, April 6.—Gov. Harmon today sent a message to the senate urging that bills be passed providing for the non-partisan election of delegates to the constitutional convention, and their nomination by petition only.

The abolishing of party emblems in all municipal elections, smaller city councils, state-wide primaries for the nomination of all public officials and the Oregon plan of senatorial election.

After naming these measures and stating that the time for their passage is perilously short, he says:

"I am certain that the people of the state generally without regard to party or other divisions earnestly desire the passage of these measures and will not be content to wait two years for them."

CONGRESSMAN ASHBROOK MAY BE CALLED UPON TO INVESTIGATE ALL OF THE POSTOFFICE EXPENDITURES

Washington, April 6.—Representative Sheppard of Texas, today introduced a resolution calling for a complete investigation of the post office department by the committee on expenditures of which Representative Wm. A. Ashbrook of the Seventeenth Ohio district is chairman. Should the resolution be adopted, which is very probable, Congressman Ashbrook would be confronted with a stupendous task, requiring months of arduous labor.

ENGINEER STRICKEN ON DUTY

Ellsworth McElroy of B. & O. Suffers Paralytic Stroke at Salesville, Wednesday Evening.

Mr. Ellsworth McElroy, one of the best known and most reliable engineers in the employ of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, residing in this city with his family at 90 Western avenue, sustained a stroke of paralysis while out on the road on his engine Wednesday night.

Wednesday when he left Newark on his engine on train 188, east-bound, he was in the enjoyment of his usual health. He was making excellent time on the run and had taken siding at Salesville for No. 5. While the train was standing there he got down from his seat and took a drink of water, when he staggered and fell to the floor of the cab.

Mr. W. M. Haver, the assistant train master of the Baltimore and Ohio, who was on the engine, assisted Mr. McElroy to his seat and the engine was run to Barnesville, where the sick man was placed in charge of the company physician, who found that he had sustained a stroke of paralysis, affecting the left arm.

He was brought to Newark on No. 7 Thursday morning and taken to his home on Western avenue, where he is receiving the best of attention.

Mr. McElroy has been a resident of Newark about twelve years, during all of which time he has been employed by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad company. About a year ago, it will be remembered that he was overcome by the heat while on his engine, and that his heart was affected. He, however, soon rallied, and in a short time was back on his engine, performing his duties as usual. For some time Mr. McElroy had charge of a passenger engine.

PRINZESS IRENE IS ASHORE

Big Ocean Liner Carries 1000 Steerage and Cabin Passengers

WRECKING TUGS AT HAND

Captain Claims There is No Danger and That all Aboard are Safe.

New York, April 6.—The North German Lloyd steamer Prinzess Irene, in today from Europe, is ashore off Long Hill life saving station, 1 1/2 miles east of Fire Island. She is a high sea running and the life savers, from the Sandy Hook station, have put off in their big power boat.

The position where the liner is ashore is not dangerous. The bottom is sandy. The wind is light and the chief danger to the ship is in the breeze gaining strength. The life-saving crews from Point of Woods, Blue Point, Belport, Smithport, Forge and Moriches are standing by, ready to the assistance of the Sandy Hook crew if it should be necessary.

The sand spit on which the Irene is ashore is not far from the western end of Fire Island, which connects Great South Bay with the open sea. Cross currents make navigation very dangerous at this point. On board the liner are 1,000 steerage passengers and a complete cabin list of passengers returning from Italy and South Europe.

The North German Lloyd people were notified by wireless and immediately

UTILITIES PASSED BY THE HOUSE

Bill Had 90 Votes for and 14 Against It

COMMISSION PROVIDED

Which Will Have Control of Issuing of Stock and Bonds of Service Corporations.

Columbus, April 6.—By a vote of 90 to 14, the house yesterday passed the Winters public utilities bill. The bill which Judge Winters introduced nor was it the even weaker bill that the house codes committee reported out. The measure, which was supported by so overwhelming a majority, was made on the floor. That work occupied the greater part of two legislative days. The reconstructor of its fabric was Representative Lawrence K. Langdon of Warren, the Republican floor leader.

He put muscle and backbone into the weakling. In the shape in which it goes to the senate the bill is generally regarded as stronger than the Woods bill, which the last senate killed.

Practically the entire house, Democrats and Republicans alike, followed Langdon's leadership in forcing in amendments to strengthen the measure. Judge Winters at the morning session started to oppose Langdon's efforts, but abandoned the attempt in the afternoon.

The utility lobby decided to center its opposition to the bill in the senate, which has come to be known as the graveyard of progressive measures. There, if at all, is to be lost the measure which seeks to extend the supervisory jurisdiction of the state railroad commission over all utilities under the name of the public service commission of Ohio.

Fifty-three Democrats, 36 Republicans and one independent voted for the bill. Seven Democrats and seven Republicans voted against it. The were Brennan, Crosser, Edwards, Fielinger, Friebohn, Sawicki of Cleveland, Donson of Montgomery, Ell of Geauga, Freider of Vinton, Winar of Lake, Woodworth of Athens.

The opposition was made up of conservatives and ultra progressives. The six Clevelanders opposed the bill because they failed to cut out of it all reference to local utilities.

It was a real utilities bill which the house passed. It provides for a commission with full control over the issuing of stocks and bonds of all public service corporations.

The commission is given control over the rates of all utilities, except such as obtain franchises from municipal counties, and as to them is made a board of arbitration between the municipality, and the utility, with its findings on the utility. And the commission may act only when rates are adjusted at the beginning of a 10-year period. It has nothing to say as to original franchises. Rates are to be based on physical valuations.

Telephone companies may merge by buying the franchise and business of competitors, but not by purchase of stock and by limitation to holding 25 per cent of the stock of another telephone company, the long-distance combine cannot gain stock control of local companies and then milk them. Telephone companies must interchange service and all utilities must interchange use of tracks, wires, conduits and subways.

Langdon rewrote the stock section so as clearly to prevent the issuing of watered stock. The utility may not do so and the commission may not allow it. Stocks and bonds may not be issued for the reimbursement of money secured by issuing securities for more than five years prior to Jan. 1, 1913, and regardless of time limit, may not be issued to cover maintenance of service and not for replacements, unless accounts have been kept to show the purpose of the expenditure.

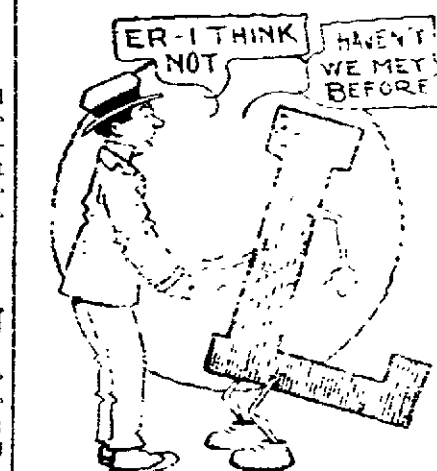

Stocks and bonds may be issued only for acquisition of property, construction and improvement of facilities. (Continued on Page 4, Col. 4.)

MAY TAKE DONELLY CASE FROM JURY

Napoleon, O., April 6.—Judge Donnelly was told for embezzlement scored today when his attorneys forced Ex-Governor Donnelly of the Citizens State Bank to admit that at the time Donnelly is alleged to have embezzled $29,000 the insurance company had no fund in the bank. This makes the transaction one purely on paper and it may result in the case being taken from the jury.

A supper of two courses was served and the menu was followed by a season of toasts and talks. After this the remainder of the evening was spent in dancing. The banquet was given as a reward in the membership contest the reds, the losing side, banqueting the blues, who were the winners.

Thursday, April 6, was the eightieth anniversary of the birth of Mrs. Susan Redman, mother of Mr. Smith Redman, and the event was quietly celebrated at her home, 89 North Fourth street. Mrs. Redman is the widow of Mr. Samuel Redman, who died many years ago. She has been a resident of Newark for the past thirty-five years, where she is highly respected by all who know her. May she live to celebrate many more anniversaries of her birth is the wish of all.

Miss Marjorie Collins was hostess to the members of the Wednesday Afternoon Sewing club on the club day of this week at her home in Hudson avenue. The afternoon hours were pleasantly spent with the needles and a delicious luncheon was served.

The guests of the club were Miss Peterman, who is the guest of Mrs. Edward Thomas of North Fifth street, Miss Sarah Seymour of Granville, and Miss Frances Wright.

Chaperoned by Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Gaumerdinger, the Sorosis club entertained about fifty couple in the dancing hall, Tuesday evening with a sham party. One of the features of the evening was a prize waltz, honors being awarded Mr. John Shank and Miss Ada Shank. Light refreshments were served and a delightful dance program enjoyed till twelve o'clock.

The Progressive club each year devotes the last meeting to an important function which it calls "President's Day," at which time the past and present presidents are honored, and last evening seemed a climax to the successful affairs of previous years.

An innovation was the invitations extended to the gentlemen, each member being allowed to bring a male guest.

The evening was most enjoyably spent at the hospitable home of Mrs. F. M. B. Windle of North Fourth street, and was inaugurated by the service of a sumptuous four course dinner.

The guests were seated at long tables, which were tastefully decorated in white and green, while on the honor table, set in the front parlor, where sat the president, Mrs. Charles Allen, and the ex-presidents, was a magnificent bouquet of pink roses. The place cards were daintily hand-painted by Miss Lucy Wright.

After the dinner, Mrs. Allen in a few well chosen remarks, introduced the toastmistress, Mrs. W. W. Gard, who presided with graceful ease and introduced those who were to respond to the toasts in the following order: "Our Presidents"—Mrs. M. Montgomery, "Our Hostess"—Mrs. Ed Doe, "Our Guests"—Mrs. Oscar Stevens.

An impromptu toast proposed by Mrs. W. E. Wright was most heartily drunk.

The service was faultless by Misses Camille Windle, Bernice Wintermute, Marjory Lawhead, Elizabeth Oweu, Juliette Besuden, and Alda Scott.

The guests were then invited to attend a theatrical performance in the "Garret Theatre," which had been most carefully fitted up in the Windle home. Not a feature was lacking in the arrangement, proscenium, drop curtain, electric footlights, orchestra and gallery being in evidence. The ushers were Misses Camille Windle and Bernice Wintermute.

The rendition of an intensely amusing skit entitled the "Broken Hearted Club" was indeed a most creditable performance and was a revelation of the ability of those who took part that was amazing, and the audience thoroughly appreciated the performance.

Some Women We Ought to Know

Susannah Wesley and All Devoted Mothers

THE name of Wesley is known around the globe. Whenever it is mentioned there always springs to mind the thought of John Wesley, the great preacher, or possibly of Charles Wesley, the sweet singer. But a third should share the honor and reverence the name of Wesley calls up—Susannah Wesley, the mother of these two men. That she shall have the recognition due her, those who are putting in the one hundred stained glass windows in the Liverpool Cathedral to the memory of notable women have decided, and one window is in her honor and that of all devoted mothers.

Susannah Wesley was the mother of nineteen children. That fact alone is enough to make the modern woman gasp. To bear nineteen children is more than should be asked of any one woman. But Susannah Wesley did far more than merely bring these children into the world. She looked after them in rather unusual fashion.

Every woman who knows anything about housekeeping and home-making knows what the care of such a family would mean. The mere cooking, dishwashing, laundry work and mending would be a tremendous burden upon any one woman and would tax her almost beyond accomplishment. But Susannah Wesley performed this work and much more. She not only cared for these children as every real mother cares for her children, but she educated them until they were ready for college, prepared them for college in fact, such of them as went to college, with the exception of a few studies.

The family life had the usual catastrophes, perhaps a few more. Money was none too plentiful. Her husband was a minister earning about a thousand dollars a year. Once he was cast into prison for debt. Twice they were burned out, one child at one time being left in the burning house and only saved by extraordinary efforts. The common lot of hard work, little money, mishaps and sickness was hers. Yet how splendidly she towered above it. And when her husband was absent on his religious work, she even went on with his home work and held religious services in her kitchen. They were successful, too, the room being crowded.

How did she accomplish all this? By system and inward peace. She planned her work carefully. As the children grew up, she made them do their share. And she took two hours every day for herself which she spent in prayer and meditation. This last fact is one of the most significant in her life, for it was undoubtedly the source of her power and strength. She came from these two hours of meditation strong and ready for the work awaiting her.

No child was permitted to cry aloud after it was one year old. Perfect honesty, uprightness and truthfulness were enforced. The children were sent to their rooms at certain hours each day for Bible reading and prayer, going two by two, an older one in charge of a younger. She held a religious conversation with one each day, taking them in turn. These methods of hers are rather interesting in comparison with the training, or lack of training, of children in many homes today. But her whole life is interesting and full of inspiration. The mother of today facing trials and hardships can find much in the life of Susannah Wesley to send her on her way heartened and rejoicing.

That those in charge of selecting the women to be honored in the Liverpool Cathedral have chosen her is most commendable.

IMPROVEMENTS IN COURT HOUSE PARK PLANNED

Board of Trade Raising Special Fund to Place Fountains and Shrubbery in Park.

The Board of Trade will undertake to make some marked improvements in the court house park this spring, beginning with the elm tree planting on Arbor Day, April 7th. Shrubbery will be planted in the park, some of the walks repaired and sanitary drinking fountains installed.

As there is a demand for more money than the Board of Trade's treasury will warrant, a special fund is being raised for the court house park improvement. In a few minutes this morning one of the officers of the Board of Trade raised $100 in $5 and $10 subscriptions. Several times this amount is needed to do the work necessary. All of the money subscribed will be expended upon the park and the extent of the improvement will depend upon the amount of money subscribed.

Every citizen should be interested in the beautification of the public park and all are invited to contribute to the fund. The work is to be done at once so it will be necessary to know right away how much money is available. The reader is invited to send his or her check in any amount to the Newark Board of Trade right away specifying that the money is to go into the court house park improvement fund. The names of subscribers will be published and an itemized list of expenditures will be printed so that the people will know where the money comes from and how it is expended. The fountains will be bought at wholesale price and will be set by the city.

You, reader, are cordially invited to help beautify the park. Let us make the court house park the prettiest spot in Newark. Please send in your subscription to the Board of Trade right now.

AMUSEMENTS

LAST NIGHT'S SHOW was a grand improvement over "Told Many operettas may come, but to be the best of the last season. He is even vied with "The Merry Widow" for the possession of a very pleasant humor they must bring nothing less than a new one.

Aside from the Maxin song and the smallest way, for better or for ill, of the other beautiful songs with its evolution of party women and "The Cavalier" beautifully costumed, its gorgeous costumes and the male soloist's magnificent of its production it is one of the best of the last of the most delightful things ever seen.

"The Merry Widow" lost nothing in its second presentation here and it was a success of the last act was though the company was different as passed. In the song "Butter to cast with the exception of two possibilities" with the dance was rather much ple it was the same bright and sparkling melody and the role of an English being musical levity. Of course that part was rather much of a nice consideration is always given to the however it is a beautiful set and the merits of the people playing the roles, such as the "Break of Day" piece.

Scene from "Madame X," Attraction at the Auditorium, Friday, April 7.

of Sonia and Prince Danilo. On last evening Miss Frances Cullenon essayed the former and a more beautiful woman or a more finished singer and dancer could not be desired. Of charming personal appearance Miss Cullenon is gifted with a superb soprano voice of wonderful range and clearness. She is also an exceptionally beautiful dancer and with George Damerel as the Prince their work lost nothing of the vivaciousness and brilliancy. Mr. Damerel is a handsome prince, also is he a happy one and a most graceful dancer. If at times he appeared somewhat bored with his work it may be pardoned as reputation will unavoidably lend itself to monotony.

Harry Burgess is exceptionally clever as Popoff the Maroccan ambassador. Mr. Burgess is one of the young men with the company which visited Newark last year, he then played the role of Khadija. Arthur Wood as Nish, the messenger is the other of the duo. Mr. Wood's work, as the messenger, is highly lauded. Michelle Arizolla made a pleasing Natalia and has a charming voice. Forrest Schackelford as Camille De Jolition, a singer of New York, while in Paris

WALKER WHITESIDE IN "THE MELTING POT"

One Read wrote the following after seeing Israel Zangwill's play, "The Melting Pot," in which Walker Whiteside comes to the Auditorium theatre Thursday, April 6. The show Frenchmen who said that the drama would be great if there were no actors has not seen Walker Whiteside in "The Melting Pot." The play is excellent, full of shows, nerves, but a play that could be easily ruined. But his speaks its delicacy, its art. The promises of genius is to make us forget ourselves and most especially does Whiteside do this. The play is an heroic poem set to stirring music.

"MADAM X"

At the Auditorium theatre Friday, April 7, "Madam X," the powerful melodrama, continues to be the dramatic sensation of the time. No play in the collection has so sweetly played. Schackelford as Camille De Jolition, a singer of New York, while in Paris

George Primrose, the King of Minstrels and His Clever Dancers, Murphy and West, at the Orpheum, Tuesday, Friday and Saturday.

SPARTAN STAIN

It gives a superfine finish to wood-work, old or new. It preserves at the same time it beautifies.

It is not a theoretical finish. It is made by men who are intensely practical, whose careers have been focused on wood finish making. Ready mixed for your use--or your painter's. Practical painters object to certain prepared floor stains that are not practical--pretty theories that don't make good on real wood. We trust Spartan Stain to the verdict of your most experienced painter. The more practical he is the better. We know it revives, beautifies and preserves floors, doors, wood-work, furniture. It is a wonder worker in the house. A score or more of colors.

Buy it and try it.

Seen Our Newark Store?

It's pronounced by local painters and interior decorators the model paint store. Everything here their profession demands, regardless of whether we happen to make it or not. And it's the place to get paint pointers from paint makers.

The Marietta Paint & Color Co.

whence it came, it played for an entire season--an unprecedented record for the French metropolis. Henry W. Savage has made a wonderful record of success also as a chooser of theatrical material as he has hitherto produced such triumphs in other fields as "The Merry Widow" or his other notable hits. In New York "Madam X" has been seen by 400,000 playgoers, an achievement absolutely without parallel in the modern history of the drama. "Madam X" will be seen at the Auditorium on Friday, April 7, played by a notably fine company and staged exactly as in New York.

"GRAUSTARK"

When George Barr McCutcheon wrote "Graustark" he gave to the novel reading public, a romance as absorbing and interesting as any fiction ever written. This story of a mythical kingdom appealed to more than the average reader of novels, and the theatergoers of Newark will have the opportunity of witnessing the dramatization of same by George D. Baker at the Auditorium theatre on an early date.

The story--and probably there are few who have not read it--is faithfully followed in its presentation in dramatic form. The first act brings Grenfall Lorry the American and his friend Harry Anquish to Edelweiss Graustark, in search of the fair "Miss Guggenstocker" whom Lorry met in America. They overheard a plot to abduct the ruling Princess of Graustark. In the second act, the abduction plot is foiled by the two Americans, who in the doing of same, learn the mysterious "Miss Guggenstocker" is in reality the Princess. In the succeeding acts the action is carefully carried out to a final happy culmination for all parties concerned.

AN EXCITING VOCATION.

"A successful moving picture photographer's life is hard, not made," said Leman H. Howe whose Travel Festival will be at the Auditorium theatre on an early date, in answer to the question, how it was possible to get near enough without loss of life to photograph some subjects at such close range as he shows.

"In addition to being a highly skilled camera man," continued Mr. Howe, "he must have a cool and a most critical and artistic eye. His moments. He must frequently prove himself a linguist and enough of a diplomat to gain favor from the power that be. He must at all times be alert and resourceful, and if he lacks any one of these qualities, he cannot hope to aspire to success in motion photography.

"NEWLYWEDES AND THEIR BABY."

It is a pleasure to note the coming of a big, meritorious show to our city, "The Newlyweds and Their Baby," with the unique advertising line, "60 1-2 people," is booked for an early appearance here. The date will be pronounced soon.

ORPHEUM.

Do not fail to see George Primrose, the Minstrel King, and his clever dancers, Murphy and West, at the popular Arcade play house this week. Kindly note he is only here two more days, and you can't afford to miss this opportunity. The Four Olivers are an added attraction, which is a sensational tight-wire feature that will interest you all. Miss Willimine Bawman will be a special treat to all lovers of music and Jack Le Roy the comedian will make you laugh. The Orpheumscope has a new feature film.

NO MORE GRAY HAIR

It is easier to preserve the color of the hair than to restore it, although it is possible to do both. Our grandmothers understood the secret. They made and used a "sage tea," and their dark, glossy hair long after middle life was due to this fact. Our mothers have gray hairs before they are fifty, but they are beginning to appreciate the wisdom of our grandmothers in using "sage tea" for their hair, and are fast following suit. The present generation has the advantage of the past in that it can get a ready to use preparation called Wreth's Sage and Sulphur. As a scalp tonic and color restorer, this preparation is vastly superior to the ordinary "sage tea" made by our grandmothers, and it can be bought for 50 cents and $1 a bottle almost any first-class drug store, or will be sent direct by the Wreth Chemical Company, 74 Cortlandt St., New York City, upon receipt of price.

For sale and recommended by P. D. Hall, druggist.

Daddy's Bedtime Story The Fat Boy

Joe Was Always Eating or Sleeping

WHEN you are a little older, children," said daddy one evening to Jack and Evelyn, "you will probably read the stories written by a great writer named Charles Dickens. He wrote many books which folks love to read, and in them he put people who are very, very interesting. Most of them, of course, are interesting mainly to grownups, for most of Dickens' stories were written for them, but there are in the books some people who are also very interesting to children. One of them, the best of them, is Joe, the funny fat boy, who is in a book called the 'Pickwick Papers.'

"Joe is the servant of Mr. Wardle. At one time Mr. Wardle called on him to set the table, and this is how it was done. I shall change a few words in order to make it easier for you to understand:

"Plates, Joe, plates. Now, Joe, the fowls. That boy's gone to sleep again. Joe, Joe! Joe was tapped on the head with a stick, and he was roused with some difficulty. 'Come, hand in the eatables.'

"There was something in the sound of the last word which roused the boy. He jumped up, and his dull eyes, which twinkled behind his mountainous cheeks, smiled upon the food as he unpacked it from the basket.

"You must know, youngsters, that Joe was always either eating or sleeping. The story goes on a little later to say:

"Mr. Wardle unconsciously changed the subject by calling loudly for Joe. 'That boy's gone to sleep again,' said the old gentleman.

"'Very extraordinary boy, that,' said Mr. Pickwick. 'Does he always sleep in this way?'

"'Sleep,' said the old gentleman. 'He's always asleep. Goes on errands fast asleep and snores as he waits at table.'

"'How very odd,' said Mr. Pickwick.

"'Ah, odd indeed,' returned the old gentleman. 'I'm proud of that boy—wouldn't part with him on any account. He's a natural curiosity. Here, Joe—Joe—take these things away and open another bottle, d'ye hear?'

"The fat boy rose, opened his eyes, swallowed the huge piece of pie he had been in the act of chewing when he last fell asleep and slowly obeyed his master's orders.

"This is only one of many scenes in which Joe, the fat boy, plays a part. He is really very, very funny, and I am sure you will enjoy reading about him when you are older. You will find many other things just as interesting in Dickens' works."

GOLDLOCKS

LILLY and the twins and Rosa rushed noisily in from school crying variously, "Want a doughnut?" "Doughnuts!" "Doughnuts!" and "Mayn't I have a raisin-cake?"

"Wait a minute," laughed Mrs. Remson. "You haven't any of you said a word to Aunt Vance."

The four faces sobered instantly. "Hallo!" said the twins, dismally.

"How do you do?" asked Rosa, shyly, as she drew nearer and held out her thin little hand. Aunt Remson smiled, the gentle smile she unconsciously reserved for her motherless children.

"My land," wheezed Aunt Vance, "this child gets so plumping all the time. William, even if he is a boy, has got more fat on his bones than she has." "I weigh seventy-nine pounds," chuckled Billy, "and I grew four inches just this last year."

"Sounded like it when you came up the steps," nodded his aunt, dryly.

"Now can I have a doughnut?" he demanded, turning to his mother.

"Do you think it's good for them to eat between meals?" put in Aunt Vance.

"There do get so hungry," murmured Mrs. Remson. "Mrs. Remson never seem to hurt anyone, either."

"Well, I think all sweets are bad," sighed Aunt Vance, putting her hand to her cushiony side. "Doctor Flannery has positively forbid my touching 'em."

Rosa, rummaging in the cookie jar a moment later, and laughing at a cross the lid at her cousins. "Doctor Flannery has positively forbid," she chuckled, closing her eyes and sighing melodramatically.

"Gosh, but I hate Aunt Vance," spluttered Billy, his mouth full of doughnut. "She makes me think of mush."

Rosa shivered. "I'm glad my this year's stay is over there," she sighed. "Only Ann Mary is nice. I love her Ann Mary. You'd like Ann Mary, Billy, for she makes the grandest apple pie."

"Shouldn't," snapped Billy, "shouldn't like any place nor anybody where Aunt Vance was."

"I shouldn't," decided the blue-eyed twin, "I shouldn't either."

The brown-eyed one giggled. "I should," she insisted, implacably. "I certainly should."

"You should not," shrieked the other as they chased madly from the pantry. "You should not," her thin voice screamed, "because you're my twin and you couldn't."

"Could," taunted the other from the grape-arbor fence. Billy and Rosa sauntered forth to watch the combat.

"What are you hanging round here for?" asked Rosa curiously as she nibbled close to the raisin. "Crowd's gone to Bat Weaver's," he responded, laconically.

"Play B-spy if I get enough kids?" demanded Rosa.

Billy considered, loftily. He hated playing with girls; it was only a little better than not playing at all. But in view of his recent difficulties with Bat Weaver he could not consistently enter into the neighborhood reveries, so when she had rounded up the twins, the three Schuyler girls, and the boy who had just moved across the street, he consented to "count out" with a glib twisting of the mystic formula that elected the new boy "it." Rosa wriggled breathlessly through the cellar window to a snug nook under the side veranda. As she squirmed close to the lattice to peer out at the new boy, who was chanting monotonously "forty-four-fifty-four-fifty-sixty-six," she observed that his half-shut eyes were slyly searching the landscape.

"O-o-o-o-o, the little cheat," she thought, disgustingly. "Wait till I tell Billy on him."

Above her she could hear the cracking of Aunt Vance's rocker. Her dolorous voice sounded disagreeably clear above the creaking.

"You ought to put a stop to her strutting around," said the lady, severely. "She isn't allowed to tramp around so at my house, to my mind thirteen is altogether too big for such goings on." Rosa tucked out her tongue in the darkness. But she grinned when she heard Aunt Remson's laugh.

"She's just a little girl, really," said Aunt Remson. "I haven't the heart to stop her fun. Kate, I simply haven't. Did you notice what beautiful manners she has? Didn't she greet you nicely?" Rosa's head tilted proudly.

"Her manners are all that ever will be beautiful about her," grunted Aunt Vance. "My land, I never saw such a luscious-looking child anywhere. She certainly isn't got her plain looks from the Stephenson side and I will say her mother was right pretty when she was a girl. It's a mystery to me how she came to be so downright homely."

"Just growing fast," said Aunt Remson, lightly. "She has lovely eyes and I think she will be a great deal prettier in a year or so."

"Pretty?" sniggered her sister-in-law. "That gawky little thing pretty? Don't be such a fool, Jane. I did to Ben when I sent her on to you last month. It was no wonder that my Frederick didn't mind not seeing her more'n twice a year. She just gets on my nerves. I could stand her staring eyes and her plindlingness—but that hair! Just stringy-looking. I call it—you can't even braid it smooth. Put it in one braid and it's crooked—two of 'em simply look like rat-tails."

Rosa's hand was over her mouth smothering an impulsive gasp of protest as she bunched herself up in a defiant little heap behind the lattice. "Hateful!" she thought, she whispered, hoarsely. "She's just stringy-looking. Oh, fat, bunchy-looking stringy! Don't care at all, I don't."

But she yanked a slender braid over her shoulder and eyed it curiously. It was undeniably limp and thin. The anvil died in her great eyes and she stared, bewildered. She was quite unconscious of Aunt Remson's eager defense. She did not see the boy peering through the lattice; she hardly heard him whooping joyously a moment later: "Touched the bye for Rosie! Yab, she's it!"

She pulled herself wearily through the cellar window, crawled up the stairs and out on to the back veranda.

"I'm not playing any more after I'm it," she announced, tragically. "I wouldn't play now, only I'm it."

The twins stared at her. "Aw, you got up this game," spluttered Billy. "I wouldn't be a quitter when I'd gone and started a game."

She turned her back mechanically and began counting with an aching throat, "Fifteen-fifteen—"

Lucille Baldwin Van Slyke

Unconquerable tears forced themselves through her tightly closed eyelids. When the game was over she refused to give any explanation, but stalked stiffly into the house and upstairs to her bedroom. Her fingers were shaking as she turned the key and listened. Nobody was following her. Standing with her back to the door she gazed straight across the room to the dressing-table mirror. With the blessed unconsciousness of childhood she had never thought very much about her actual appearance. Her birdlike glances at the mirror had been to gaze proudly at the pretty frills Aunt Remson fashioned, or to scowl at the prim collars Aunt Vance always bought. But now, for the first time, she was facing with desperate eyes a somebody she had never seen before. Somebody with straggling hair, with a stubby little nose, with freckles and awkward teeth, and with eyes so big and sorrowful that she hid her face in her hands and wept.

As she groped for a handkerchief her fingers touched the leather case that held her father's picture. The sobs grew quieter for a moment as she looked through her streaming tears at the beloved face, but a new misery was crowding fast upon her first grief. A great pity for the unhappy father of so ugly a daughter possessed her. It seemed to her that all the sorrow of those mournful eyes, all the sadness of that smileless mouth, meant that he grieved because he was ashamed of his unlovely child.

On the wall beside her was the calendar with the days checked off with tiny dots so the others could not see and laugh. O—last night she had fallen asleep tingling with delight as she counted the days until she could hear the deep tones of his dear voice and feel the swift touch of his lips as he kissed her. And all those beautiful dreams of the time when they should live together were dying as she stared at the picture. He would never want her—he didn't want her now!

"Dear Lord," she sobbed, crouching on the bed-side rug. "It isn't fair—not a bit fair! You didn't have a right to let me grow so homely that he couldn't love me. It isn't fair at all!"

Presently she heard the twins pounding on her door. "We're playing military store!" shrieked Elsa. "Come on out and trim hats! We found elegant trimmings up in the attic."

She opened the door slowly. They looked sharply at the traces of her grief and demanded its reason. "My tooth ached," she lied, bravely, and then sucked remorsefully at her molar to rouse a tiny hole to action so it would not be a lie.

Elsa promptly put her grimy fingers to her cherubic mouth and drew forth an elastic string of gum with which she rolled knowingly in her sandy pacha. "Stuff it in good and hard," she admonished, holding it out to her cousin. "Don't go and tell mamma, 'cause the new denturist hates something 'berve. I'm never going to tell on a tooth again as long as I live!"

The twins were fearfully and wonderfully arrayed as became real milliners. In sweeping skirts and elaborate bodices, Elsa was adorned with a gorgeous necklace which, in its hammy, prehistoric days, had begun existence as a brass curtain chain. Eloise's jewels were more simple, but quite as effective. From a luscious green ribbon about her neck there dangled a queer-looking locket. "It's old black tin, I guess. I play it's a vanity box, only it won't open," she scoffed, "not even when you bite it."

But when Mrs. Remson sought for them at supper-time she caught at the "vanity box" with an exclamation of surprise.

"It's Frederick's old gutta-percha locket," she explained to her sister-in-law. "He wore it on his first watch-fob and we used to tease him so about it." She flicked her thumb-nail at the spring fastening as the children crowded eagerly about her. The locket flew open.

"And I found that!" breathed Eloise in awe-stricken delight. "I found it right in that old yellow box! Oh, my soul!"

"Who is the pretty lady?" asked Rosa, shyly. Aunt Remson put the locket gently into the girl's hand. "It's your mother, sweetheart," she said.

Rosa's fingers closed swiftly over it as she fled. Up the stairs once more, crouching on the bedside rug again, she gazed rapturously at her treasure. The locket was fat and thick, and under the dusty glass shone a queer old type. The cheeks were rimmed very pink, the hair very yellow. It was not stringy-looking hair; it was wonderful curly hair. The eyes smiled; Rosa smiled back at them happily.

"Oh-oh, aren't you sweet?" she murmured, hugging her hands to her heart so tightly that the locket hurt her. "O-o-o-o, you are so sweet!"

She looked at it again, drawing long, happy breaths. This was a very much nicer mother than the faded photograph with tired eyes that hung on Aunt Remson's wall. In the other side of the locket, pressed under the glass, was a curl of yellow hair tied with a bit of blue ribbon. On the inside of the cover was written in very small letters: "To Frederick, from Goldlocks."

Rosa looked at the curl even longer than she had stared at the picture. At supper, as she sat in her chair, her eyes were shining. Aunt Remson smiled understandingly. She did not mention the locket, for Aunt Vance, sipping her cup of substitute coffee, remembered.

"Rosa, what did you do with that picture?" she asked sternly. "I ought not to get lost again, seeing your mother's dead. Ben, did you know the children found a picture of Rosie today? Thirteen—In autumn, I think you ought to put it in your safe until Frederick comes."

For the third time in that awful day Rosa fled to her room. Elsa dropped her fork in amazement. "Aren't you going to make her believe, mamma?" she asked. "She is so rude today. She jumps off like a sparrow!"

In the twilight, with Aunt Remson's hand on the stringy-looking hair, she stopped her sobbing. "Honest, shan't she?" she questioned doubtfully. "Honest, won't you let her?"

"Honest, she shan't," comforted Aunt Remson. "It's quite yours until father comes, and I'm sure he'll let you have it."

Rosa was silent a very long time. "Aunt Remson," she said, timidly, "do you love folks—folks who aren't pretty?"

Long after the others were asleep Rosa lay wide-eyed and tried to forget the homely little face of the mirror and remember only the pretty new mother. She did not cry about it any more.

"I guess," she thought, as she grew blessedly drowsy, "I guess the Lord wouldn't have been so good to a regular pretty girl and sent her this locket. He must just know how I needed you." She kissed the locket. "Course he couldn't love me very lots, father couldn't, after having you—but I want him to!"

During the rest of Aunt Vance's visit, and indeed long after she had happily terminated her stay, Rosa was quiet enough to satisfy the most exacting aunt. She moped over her books or sat lost in day-dreams, once, to be sure, she convulsed them all with one of her old-time pranks. She floated to bed, chuckling, her head covered with grotesquely lumpy spots, "kids" borrowed from Sadie Arwater and laboriously adjusted according to the profuse directions upon a box.

The before-breakfast frolic the morning following was hilarious. They were not successful curls that the "kids" had produced on Rosa's head. Her fine locks were hopelessly entangled in unaccounted coils; they stood out facetiously at the wrong places and were wickedly straight in sections. Aunt Remson found the girl and her cousins in school of laughter. Without an obliterating shampoo scale was out of the question. Of course it was all very funny, but somehow there was a nervous strain in Rosa's laughter.

"I s'pose," she said solemnly, with her head over the radiator in a frenzied attempt to get properly dried before school. "I s'pose, Aunt Rem, that if the Lord hasn't time to make you curly hair you can't do it yourself. Probably Sadie's hair is a weeny bit curly anyhow."

After all these sober days Aunt Remson sighed with relief one afternoon when she heard Rosa's little "Women make me tired," grunted Billy, "all knocking her all the time. Promise not to squeal? Honest? Well, I've been there."

He glomped over Rosa's horror and went on, boastfully. "Yep, twice. She called me in to fix her bird-house up on her soap, and then she let me hear her funnyraft, and she let me run it myself, too; gee, I think it's a peach-erino. I don't see why ma's so down on funnyrafts."

"Oh," gasped Rosa, in dismay, "you mustn't ever go there again, Billy; nobody goes to her house."

"I do," asserted Billy, independently, "and I say she's all right. Folks are just jealous of her. Gee, hasn't her hair grand?"

"Yes," agreed Rosa, soberly. "She's got awful swell clothes, too." Billy went on. "I should think folks would like her 'stead of being so down on her."

"But Mrs. Remsoner Brown says she's simply impossible," insisted his cousin, "and nobody does know her."

"Hold this basket," ordered Billy, with masculine decision. "I'm going to sneak around and ask. I'll bet we get a slew."

Rosa waited, timorously. Miss Thompson, it appeared, was not at home, but her maid good-naturedly collected a great many bottles, at least fifteen cents' worth they reckoned as they trotted home with the heavy basket. They found the twins busily scrubbing in the kitchen. It was Mrs. Thompson's turn. The bottle man might pay more for clean bottles. Billy and Rosa joyously agreed it was a splendid idea. And as they sneaked themselves with soap they squabbled happily over what should be the division of profits and speculated gleefully over the probable envy of their less energetic neighbors.

"Oh Miss Johnson's rheumatism comes in grand bottles," chuckled Elsa, as she tried a nutmeg grater on a refractory label.

"Currycomb couldn't get that off," Billy grunted, throwing down the can-opener in disgust. "Gee, girls always want to wash dishes. I'll bet he won't pay a cent more. I'm not going to wash. Jake said I could go to the backsmith's with him. Mind you don't tell him while I'm gone." But late in the afternoon, when he counted up his bottles, he was certain that one was gone. He wasn't exactly sure, but he thought it was a very large, two-cent one, and he vehemently accused the twins of having snatched it.

Climbing the stairs for the nap, Rosa looked down at her aunt in the hall and kissed her hand prettily. She shut the door of her room softly, locked it, and danced gleefully to the mirror.

"Rosa Fredericka! Rosa Fredericka!" she whispered. "You're going to be just lovely! Perfectly lovely!" Aunt Remson tapped softly at her door at six o'clock. "Wake up, lazy bird!" she cried.

A muffled sound reached her. "Rosa, open the door for me. I want to help you dress—here are the new hair ribbons."

"I—I can't open the door," faltered Rosa. "Can't open it? What did you lock it for? Don't you know that lock sticks? I'll shake and you'll lift up. That will do it."

"I don't want to," Rosa said, in a very small voice. "Please don't ask me—I can't."

Mrs. Remson stood still and thought. Outside in the October twilight the twins and Billy were sweeping up maple leaves for a bonfire. She listened to their happy shouts and then to the half-stifled breathing of the girl behind the door.

"Rosie, dear," she said softly, "it's almost time for father. Aren't you?"

"I know," said Rosa, brokenly. "Don't tell me—don't tell me!"

"Do you want to stay here until he comes?" asked the perplexed woman.

"I guess I do," faltered Rosa, and as she heard her aunt's retreating steps she pressed her face against the door and sobbed. Aunt Remson went back swiftly. "Rosa," said she, shaking the door sharply, "what is the matter? Are you ill?"

"No'm, I—I—I—" a white envelope was pushed under the door—"I can't see my father—I—you give him this letter."

Her puzzled aunt stared at the little letter and sighed. She was too wise to argue with the steely fast girl, but she was frankly troubled.

Mr. Stephenson and his surprise arrived at the same time. A great touring car stopped in front of the house, a long-coated figure leaped out and caught at the twins and Billy. Rosa stared through her peephole in the blind.

"Where's my daughter?" cried the beloved voice. "Who's hidden my daughter? She what?" he demanded—"a letter? Goodness, how formal!"

He read the letter standing on the step below the window. "Heavens, Jane!" he caught his sister's face in his hands. "What's all this about?"

"I don't know," she answered, kissing him, with a smile of relief. "I thought it must be serious. The poor child seemed to feel bad over it."

He read the letter into her hands. "The blue room?" he asked, and was off before she nodded. Then Mrs. Remson read the letter:

DEAR FATHER: I should like to go to some convent, please, and be a nun, if you will just say yes. I think I had better go. I am sorry I can not see you, but you must not talk to a perspective nun because men can't. I would like to kiss you good-by to-night when it is dark. Your loving daughter.

ROSA FREDERICKA STEPHENSON.

P. S.—I am sorry not to be a Presbyterian any more, but of course I can't and be a nun.

He had bounded up the stairs and was standing at her door.

"Daughter!" he said, softly.

"Father, dear," cried Rosa, "please, please go away till it is dark."

"It's nearly dark now. Hurry out! They're all waiting! We're all going down the river for a ride and dinner!" The door did not open.

"Daughter!" His voice was stern now. "I want you to come out directly."

"I can't—I can't!" insisted Rosa, stubbornly. "You mustn't ask me, for I can't."

"If it's the nun business," he said brusquely, "you can tell me that to-morrow. Come, open the door!"

"I won't," she sobbed.

The quick temper he thought he had lost in his years of suffering flared out. The door gave way with a crash that sent her flying wildly to the farthest corner. She was weak with fright when she heard him stumbling over her little stool in the darkness. He fumbled for the light, caught at the swinging bulb and snapped it on sharply.

Her slender form looked almost ludicrously small, shrinking back against the dully polished door of the wardrobe. Her dress was disordered, her head swathed ridiculously in a fringed bath-towel, and her eyes, swollen with weeping, blinked. She shielded them from the light with a quick lift of her crooked elbow. Somehow the movement irritated him.

"Good Lord! I'm not going to beat you," he burst out angrily. "Come here to me!"

She did not move. "Come here!" he repeated. "Go away!" she begged, piteously. "Please go away!"

The abject terror in her voice gave him a curious thrill of sympathetic fright. "What's the matter?" he asked more gently.

"I can't tell," she murmured. "You—you—you mustn't ask me."

He stood still a moment, completely bewildered. "If I were you," he said, awkwardly, as though he were wheedling an hysterical woman, "I'd wash my face and take off that silly towel and put on a pretty frock. They're waiting, you know."

"What utter nonsense!" he said sharply, stepping toward her. "What foolishness!" In front of the little dressing-table he stopped abruptly.

The locket was there. It was propped open on top of a pile of schoolbooks, and the curl, which had been imprisoned for so many years, lay loose beside it. He was silent so long, standing with his back to her, that she hid her face in her hands.

"Rosalie," he murmured. "Rosalie—" The room was quite still; Rosalie's daughter was forgotten. He drew a long breath and reached for the locket. It was then that he saw for the first time the tall bottle with the caddy label that stood reading the elusive words that his daughter had read the fateful day she scrubbed Mrs. Thompson's empty bottle. "Unwarranted to produce a rich, glossy, natural golden shade defying detection. Unusually lasting in results, exceptionally easy to apply."

He strode across the room and jerked the towel from her head. Matted and dampened, one side oddly spotted with brown and the other bleached a starved gaze, the little head bent low under his startled gaze. She flung herself at his feet in the agony of her humiliation.

"Don't—don't look at it," she cried. "It—it said beautiful golden, but it told an awful lie—that bottle! I truly didn't mean to be bad—I just wanted to make it nice so's you'd love me. But if I'm a nun let me be a nun and don't—don't—don't! Anyway not tonight, because tonight I thought you'd be calling me Goldlocks!"

In the long moment that he stared down at the ridiculous little figure, a sharp consciousness of his years of selfish devotion to the dead and his grudging love for the living swept over him. He turned down the merciless light and in the darkness bent over his little girl.

"Daughter, dear," he murmured, pityingly, as he caught her in his arms and kissed the strained tresses. "Daughter, dear!"

The long-endearment faltered on his lips, the memory of it was cruelly poignant, but his broken whisperer softened in her ears like heavenly music. "Goldlocks!" he sighed. "My dear little Goldlocks!"

"Aunt Remson put the locket gently into the girl's hand. 'It's your mother, sweetheart,' she said."

giggle of laughter. "I found it right in that old yellow box! Oh, my soul!"

"Who is the pretty lady?" asked Rosa, shyly. Aunt Remson put the locket gently into the girl's hand. "It's your mother, sweetheart," she said.

Rosa's fingers closed swiftly over it as she fled. Up the stairs once more, crouching on the bedside rug again, she gazed rapturously at her treasure. The locket was fat and thick, and under the dusty glass shone a queer old type. The cheeks were rimmed very pink, the hair very yellow. It was not stringy-looking hair; it was wonderful curly hair. The eyes smiled; Rosa smiled back at them happily.

"Oh-oh, aren't you sweet?" she murmured, hugging her hands to her heart so tightly that the locket hurt her. "O-o-o-o, you are so sweet!"

She looked at it again, drawing long, happy breaths. This was a very much nicer mother than the faded photograph with tired eyes that hung on Aunt Remson's wall. In the other side of the locket, pressed under the glass, was a curl of yellow hair tied with a bit of blue ribbon. On the inside of the cover was written in very small letters: "To Frederick, from Goldlocks."

Rosa looked at the curl even longer than she had stared at the picture. At supper, as she sat in her chair, her eyes were shining. Aunt Remson smiled understandingly. She did not mention the locket, for Aunt Vance, sipping her cup of substitute coffee, remembered.

After their mother had quelled the inevitable strife she sighed a little.

"Children are such savages," she said to Meg as she helped the late maid clear the disordered kitchen. "Seems to me they wrangle constantly."

"Miss Rosa doesn't," drawled Meg. "She's still as a lamb and she helped wash soap a bit, too."

"She's a dear little soul," agreed Mrs. Remson. "But then," she added in humorous defence of her own, "just before father comes she's good as she can be!"

For it was only two days more. Two days and a night and then he would come. Rosa asked shyly for light blue hair ribbons instead of the customary dark ones.

"And I want my birthday dollar," she said. "I guess I won't wait till Christmas to spend it."

Aunt Remson patted her cheek as she gave her the money. "His father going to have a present, too, this time?" she hummed.

Rosa nodded, her eyes shining. "A lovely one!" she sighed. "A lovely one that's a surprise. You couldn't guess it at all!"

Her happy anticipation made Mrs. Remson sigh. She seemed filled with delight, overflowing with joy. Her cheeks flushed softly, her eyes shone. The chubby prettiness of the twins seemed ordinary enough beside the tremulous brightness that made the plain little face lovely. Mr. Stephenson would arrive on a seven o'clock train. That meant late supper and naps for the girls. For dear Aunt Remson, who couldn't keep secrets at all, hinted broadly that Uncle Frederick was planning an evening treat.

IMPROVEMENTS IN PUBLIC PARK AT COURT HOUSE

The Board of Trade is undertaking some improvements in the court house park, beginning with the planting on Arbor Day, by the public school children of a number of elm trees. This will be followed soon by the planting of a lot of sycamores and the improvement of some of the walks. It is hoped that the delay of some of the state funds will be arrested. It is probable that a fountain of two will be erected.

Some years ago Mr. E. A. Kitzmiller, of Pittsburgh, erected a memorial at the northeast corner of the public square in the form of a handsome granite fountain. As the Board of Trade thought it would be a decided improvement to remove the drinking cups and install a more sanitary way of using the fountain, a letter was addressed to Mr. Kitzmiller asking his permission to make the alterations on the fountain. Mr. Kitzmiller's cordial and generous reply follows:

My Dear Sir: Thanks for your very kind letter. I am not only perfectly willing to have you change the fountain so as to do away with the drinking cups, but I am perfectly willing to pay the expense of such change, if you will be kind enough to attend to the work.

In years gone by, our old friend, Mr. Amos Rice, took much interest in this fountain, and attended to having it bronzed. If such is necessary at the present time, will you kindly see that it is done, and send me bill for it?

Circumstances have been such during the past two years, I have not had the pleasure of visiting my old home, but it is as dear to me as ever, and my old friends who are still living are as precious to me as they ever were. I hope to see you some time during the coming summer, and have the pleasure of meeting you. Very truly yours,
E. A. KITZMILLER.

Fined Petition in Error.

A petition in error was filed on Thursday by Attorneys Jones & Jones in the case of Edgar Owens vs. the State of Ohio. He says that he filed a petition before the common pleas court asking for a discharge from custody. This brings the Owens case to the status of the cases of the men also incarcerated for murder in the first degree who have made application for release from custody under the statute of limitations. In the case of men confined for unbalanced offenses.

Will Be Returned.

Elias McMannus, a former well known Newark man, who was sent to the state hospital at Columbus some time ago on a charge of insanity, and who eloped from that institution last December, was apprehended here on Thursday. He has made his getaway from the institution several times, and had not been heard from since his last escape, having wandered all over the country. Shortly before noon Thursday he was seen to enter the home of his mother on Elmwood avenue, and the police were notified. Officer Burke soon arrived at the house and took the man to the city prison, where he will be held until the arrival of officers from the hospital, when he will be taken back.

TREE PLANTING ON ARBOR DAY

We would like to suggest to those who have purchased trees for Arbor Day that a little care taken in the planting will produce much better results in the growth of the trees.

1. Trim back the top of the tree until the top is not much larger than the roots of the tree.
2. In digging the hole dig it so that the tree will be planted about five or six inches deeper than it was previously planted.
3. Loosen the dirt in the bottom of the hole in which the tree is to be placed; set in the tree and put in a few shovels of the best soil around the roots of the tree; then pour in a few buckets of water until the soil in the bottom of the hole is thoroughly wet; then work the tree up and down a little, so that the soil will stick closely to the tree, hair-like roots of the tree. Then fill in the other soil, and pack closely around the tree.

If you follow these directions you ought to have no trouble in securing satisfactory results.
